Every Man Sees a Ghost. About a week ago a strange woman threshing-machine man of this county, whose name will not be given, by special request, to do the cooking for his crew. He did not much like the idea of employing her, as he believed the work to se too hard for her, but she importuned him so hard and pleaded such poverty that he finally consented to give her work. He gathered up a crew of the best men he could find and started out a few days ago. The first night passed off quietly, but on the second the whole camp was thrown into a state of will make the race for Congress in this district on the Republican tieket. Weather Report.

Gallesson, July 28.—Following is the weather report for the cotton bell, furnished by the United States Signal Service, acting in the morning, or just as the moon was in the morning, or just as the moon was going down. One of the men who slept near the cook-house startled the camp by his cries for help. The men rushed to where he was wrapped up in his blankets, and found him on his knees praying for all that was out. They praying for all that was out. They thought he was crazy, for it was several minutes before they could get him to speak. When he did open his mouth he pointed off in the field to a white object that seemed to be making motions for him to come to it. The men were astonished, for every one could see that to come to it. The men were asionished, to come to it. The men were asionished, to come to it. The men were asionished, to come to it. The men were asionished.

It was a woman in white. At first Mr. the boss, thought it was his is nale cook wandering about in her sleep, but he went to where she slept and found her sleeping quietly.
